

Dr. Keith Makes Fine Showing in Golfing Classic

Local Golfer Reaches Final Round of Herald Event—Misses Short Putt To Lose At Last Hole.

With the turning point coming at the 21st hole when Dr. Keith, Banff, missed a short putt that would have halved the hole, and left the match all square, P. C. Dickins, Lawinwright, came home with a driving finish to win 2 up and capture the championship of the Country Districts Golf Association, conducted by the Calgary Herald.

The 36-hole final match was played over the course of the Calgary Golf and Country Club last Sunday, and turned out to be a great battle from start to finish, the play being carried to the final hole on the sixth fairway.

With his second Dr. Keith cleared the trees and ended up to the left of the green while Dickins made a perfect play and sent the ball spinning to the cup. He sank a three foot putt to end up the winner.

Dr. Keith defeated Jack Grosvenor of Hanna, finalist in last year's championship play, on the nineteenth green to win his way into the final stage, Saturday afternoon.

Seventh Fortnightly Crop Report

Issued by the Department of Agriculture, Province of Alberta, Edmonton, July 29, 1931.

Excellent crop conditions prevail in the north central and northern parts of the province. In the south western area rain is needed. All grain crops are in a satisfactory condition. The continuous drought has resulted in almost a total fallure of wheat seeded on spring plowing on the south-eastern part of the province. Crops grown in the summer fallow in this area are also light. Ninety percent of the wheat is in head and early varieties are already coloring.

The Peace River district has recently received much needed rain and there is a prospect of good yields over a considerable part of the area. Cut worms and lack of early moisture will reduce the crop in some sections. The hay crop is about short.

The hot weather of the past few days is forcing rapid growth and has done much to hasten maturity in the area east and west of Edmonton where growth is rank and ripening somewhat later than usual. Farther south where wind damage was serious in the early part of the season, stands are thin but making excellent progress as a result of heavy rains. End of Drumheller the feed situation has improved considerably but grain yields will be light.

The irrigated districts report conditions as fairly satisfactory. Such crops as alfalfa, sugar beets, potatoes and beans are making excellent progress.

Several small areas have suffered hail damage, but loss from this source has not been serious.

A grasshopper outbreak occurred in the district north of Lethbridge, but control measures prevented serious damage.

Pastures throughout the province are generally good and livestock is in first class condition.

For a double bill with the Strathmore nine. A week from Sunday return games will be played on the local diamond. First game to commence at 1:30.

A practice has been called for Friday night, July 31, and the management wishes all players to be present.

Ranchers Fined For Allowing Grazing On Restricted Areas

It appears Messrs. Hamm Bros. placed their horses in the restricted area between Basano and Brooks at feed was short in their own district. The accused had been warned to remove their horses but failed to do so, and charges were laid by Don. H. Park, Superintendent, Irrigation Development Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. C. H. Powlett, Barrister of Calgary representing the informant and William McLave, Barrister, Basano, representing the leaseholders prosecuted. The three accused were represented by John W. Sleight Esq. Barrister of Brooks. The penalty assessed against each of the accused by Magistrate A. G. Bond was a fine of $50 and costs, or a total of $250.30. The accused through their solicitor pleaded not guilty, the defence contention being that the accused's horses were out of their control under an agreement made with Messrs. Murphy Bros. of the restricted area, but the Court considering the agreement to be nothing other than a master's directions to his servants, which directions set out the duty and remuneration to the servants. Accordingly conviction in each instance was recorded, and the before mentioned fines levied.

This trial, the second of its kind within the past few weeks was held at the Court Office, Basano last Friday, July 24.

Bearcats Draw And Lose One At Drumheller

The local baseball team journeyed to Drumheller for two ball games last Sunday afternoon, and lost one of them, while the other was a tie.

Drumheller defeated local boys in afternoon game 6 runs to 0, which was anybody game until the seventh inning. In this frame the Valley College collected 5 runs to put the game on ice. The second game was an extra innings affair, with the score even at the close of the last of the seventh. Basano tied the score in the last inning after coming from behind. They scored 5 more in first half of the twelve inning but on account of lateness of the hour, and city by-laws, game was called after Basano had been retired and score reverted back to even innings.

ROSENA RODE THE RUMBLE by ETHEL HUESTON

Fourth Instalment

Rockford Motors hire Rowena to accompany Peter on a nation-wide tour in their roadster, an adventure which she had been waiting for since the time that at the last minute Little Bobby is engaged to act as a chaperon.

A few miles out Bobby becomes tearful at being parted from her sweetheart and Rowena insists on taking her place in the rumble so that she can ride with Peter and have him to talk to about Carter. Rowena gets Peter to consent to divide the expense money each week as soon as it arrives, and sometimes Peter by saving too economically.

The three tourists reach St. Louis after passing through Buffalo and Chicago. Peter and Rowena have many times, while Bobby is entranced at the way Carter is fanning over her flight from New York.

Now to the "The Story."

There were bound to be over a million pleasant, cool, shadowy spots in that stretch of St. Louis and Kansas City.

On the way between St. Louis and Kansas City, Peter asked about short-cuts at an end of filling stations and garages as they went west but no one seemed very well informed about by-roads, and for the most part every one advised against attempting any such thing.

It was well on toward noon when Peter found a man in a garage who thought there really was a short-cut as Peter wanted, and wouldn't anybody sure it was a direct route to Kansas City, but at least it did not lead back toward St. Louis.

They had driven about twenty miles when this rambling horse-saloon at twelve seemed to turn uncertainly toward Kansas City and then made a dead run for the Nebraska River, where they were stalled in the car in the road before them. The driver lay stretched out on the bank with his hat over his face.

Peter slipped forward and rapped sharply on the glass. "Never ask advice of a broken-down driver, he warned him darkly. If he knew what he was doing, he wouldn't be broken down."

But Peter for one had struck every road in the state.

Peter thanked him for his careful directions and returned to the car. He was too much of a gentleman to leer triumphantly back at Rowena under the glaring sunbells in the rumble seat. He just got in behind the wheel and started the motor.

He had driven fully twenty miles under the worst possible sort of country road when he found that a ledge was out, and that there was no detour, and the only possible way was to go on in the direction of Kansas City was to go back to the main road and start over.

Very meekly he turned around to pay homage to her better judgment, but stopped short, staring open-mouthed, Bobby who always looked where others did turned too and her amazement surpassed his own.

The rumble seat was empty. Rowena was not there.

Peter slowly returned over the roads to where the self-styled expert had given him his directions. "Twenty miles!"

Bobby closed her eyes. Peter hoped she was praying. He would have prayed himself except that the best driving over the bad road required his complete attention. But he did keep breathing over and over in his heart the one word, "Good! Good!" and trusted the infinite would understand it for appeal.

Instinctively his foot lifted from the accelerator and at a noiseless crawl the car rolled up to the shadowy bank under the willow tree where the stranger with the stalled motor had mapped out the futile short-cut.

"Oh!" whispered Bobby weakly. "Look—look! Rowena!"

Rowena indeed, lying motionless beside the car where the story was slanted behind the trees to throw protecting shadows over her slender figure. Peter was out of the car long before it had come to a stop and was up the bank and kneeling beside her. He lifted one limp limb hand. It was stained red.

"Rowena!" he whispered.

Rowena opened her eyes. "Oh, hello!" she said cheerfully. "Gosh, you were a long time coming back."

"Are—are you hurt?" stammered Peter.

"Here? Why, no! What do you mean, hurt?" She looked a bit of red raspberry juice from her finger as she spoke.

"Did you fall out, darling?" asked Bobby in fatuously affectionate tones.

"Fall out?" repeated Rowena. "Certainly not." She stood up, lifted her arms, stretching her slender figure comfortably to its utmost. "Had a grand nap," she said. "And wrote out just what I think of Missouri. Four dears, you must be dreadfully hot and tired. Come and sit down—a nature's feast to feed you. Berries and cold spring water. I knew you would be famished so I picked heaps."

"You darling," said Bobby, and greedily fell in. "But will you please wait," she murmured, with a full mouth, for she was very hungry, "how you fell—how you got—out of the rumble seat?"

"But how—"

"When Peter and the broken-down went were dusting off Missouri in the middle of the road I noticed the her, wild berries up on the bank among the rocks. I must have got myself out of sight of the car without knowing it, for the first thing I knew, I heard the usual rattle of the engine with which dear Peter gets under, so I ran down and there you were—tearing off among the trees in a cloud of metaphorical fog. So I picked some more berries, and the broken-down got in his traps until the man from the garage came and towed him in. He invited me to go with them. I knew you would be back for me when you got round to it."

"There was a bridge out on the short-cut explained Peter quickly.

"I know. The broken-down got remembered it about ten minutes after you had gone. But of course it was too late then."

"You're very game about it, Rowena. Very sporting. I wouldn't blame you if you didn't speak to me again from here to the coast."

"Oh, nonsense!" said Rowena pleasantly. "This was just an accident. Accidents never make me mad. It's just," she added meaningfully, "just—certain—people."

In Kansas City, Bobby found thirty-one telegrams from Carter, each increasingly immoderate in its commands for her to give over to this outrageous conduct and return home at once.

Rowena had the usual fat oval addressed in the boyish scrawl, and surely she had read no further than the first paragraph when she began counting out her money. Peter had a comforting telegram from Mr. Mack, with a friendly postscript by Mr. Huff, advising that the red-haired sleigh was lifted and that he had been honored with a sort of an apology, but warning them to be careful of their future conduct.

Mr. Mack also said they were extremely pleased with the character of the work that had been turned out and enclosed check for next week's expenses.

Peter was extremely grateful for that check, for Bobby had spent the last cent of her week's allowance by Wednesday, after which time he and Rowena had been obliged to carry her between them.

"Chaperons come high, don't they?" grumbled Rowena, as she counted out nickels and dimes to make up her portion of Bobby's last manure.

It was a genuine hardship to them to be obliged to contribute so extensively to the maintenance of luxury-loving Bobby. On the other hand, her presence was so essential to the important tour that they were in no position to quarrel very seriously even with her extravagances.

"For my part, I'd rather pay her bills than read Carter's telegrams," said Peter moodily.

"I wouldn't," disagreed Rowena promptly. "I've learned to read with one eye and listen with one ear, and that way I get through with only half the mental strain."

"Yes, but you've got a rumble to ride to."

"So I have. But I have to sleep with her."

One thing was certain. Her presence was essential, and Carter and his telegrams, as well as her extravagances, were alike to be endured.

At Topeka she was startled to find but one telegram awaiting her—a ten word, straight day message.

"Are you taking first train home or are you not?"

It was not even signed.

Bobby's fight was no genuine, her disappointment so real, that Rowena and Peter tried to console

George—where did Sandy MacDougall get the training to win all those long distance swims?

Charlie—Well, when Sandy was a baby in Glasgow he lived across the river from school and there was a toll bridge.

Convincing.

For nearly an hour the girl had been compelled to listen to the fatuous gush of "My bicycle last week and I fell off, but had a little accident, was knocked senseless."

"When do you expect to get better?" she asked quickly.

Peter took them out to a movie, and Rowena with her own money—bought her a cunning little Kansas souvenir, a flask carved out of a corn-cob—and she seemed slightly more resigned.

She was very quiet as they crossed Kansas, and when they complained of the notoriously hot winds, she smiled patiently and said she didn't mind the heat, but she had had fifteen cents of her allowance left at the end of the week.

When they reached Denver, they hurried at once, as they always did, to get their mail, and there was nothing at all for Bobby, not a letter, not a telegram, not so much as a souvenir postcard. She said nothing but turned pale as a little, and said fifteen cents of her allowance left at the end of the week.

She said nothing but turned pale as a little, and said fifteen cents of her allowance left at the end of the week.

When Rowena went down to dinner she made excuses not to go said she was very tired, said she wanted a hot bath and a good sleep, said she would just read a magazine she had picked out from the news-stand.

After dinner with all good intentions, and Rowena knocked. When there was no answer she opened the door and they went in. The room had a deserted appearance. Bobby's handsome articles of toilet were gone from the dressing-table. The beautiful dressing gown was gone from the foot of the bed. But a pair of slippers lay on the floor.

Peter and Rowena looked at each other in wide-eyed consternation.

There was a note, written on hotel paper in Bobby's round childish hand. It was pinned to Rowena's pillow.

"Darlings, I'm going home. I've got to. If I don't, I'll never get my back. I'll send Peter the money I borrowed as soon as I get my allowance. I'm going on the seven o'clock train and I have already written him to meet me. You're both just sweet and I love you. I do you wish you didn't quarrel so. I'm glad Carter and I got along better."

"And that," said Rowena faintly, "is that."

"It's all of that," added Peter aloofly. "Such a thing," declared Rowena dramatically, "could be more irritatingly fatal than this."

"It was great sport while it lasted," said Peter. "You have been pretty game all the way through, Rowena."

"It was corking good business, too," said Rowena. "And taking it all in all, you are not half bad to break around with, Peter."

"Well, it's all over with now," said Peter.

"You don't suppose we could pick one up here, do you?—By advertising. The way we got Bobby in the first place."

But they both knew it was pretty hopeless.

They said good night with something vaguely suggestive of affectionate regard, for this killing, kindred disappointment gave them a cordial meeting-ground for almost the first time.

Rowena sat alone at her window little and high up, for she had gradually changed from a double to a single room immediately after the election of Bobby.

She was not one to give up without a struggle—or to give up at all, for that matter.

It was nearly midnight when she shook off her final hesitation, with a mind made up. An idea had come to her, terrifying and tremendous, hours before. She had toyed with it, weighed it in the balance and finding it wanting, pushed it resolutely away; but had permitted it to work its way back, insistently.

At twelve o'clock she called Peter on the telephone and that was the end of her hesitation.

"Listen, Peter. You meet me downstairs in the lobby, right away will you? I have an idea."

"But I'm in bed!"

NEED A LOT OF LOVING

By merickland Gilliam

Folks need a lot of loving in the morning. The day is all before with care and heat.

The cars we know and they that give no warning. For love is God's own antidote for fret.

Folks need a heap of loving at the noonday. In the battle-fall, the moment snatched from grief.

Half between the waking and the noon time. While bickering and worrying are rife.

Folks hunger so for loving at the night-time. When wearily they take them home to rest.

At slumber-sound-and-turning-out-the-light-time. Of all the time for loving that's the best.

Folks want a lot of loving every minute. The sympathy of others, and their love, till life ends; from the minute they begin it.

Folks need a lot of loving all the while.

STILES "The Druggist"

Done to a Turn

A new system of memory training was being taught in a village school and the teacher was becoming enthusiastic.

"For instance," he said, "supposing you want to remember the name of a poet—Bobby Burns. Fix in your mind's eye a picture of a policeman in flames. See—Bobby Burns!"

"Yes," said a bright pupil. "But how is any one to know it does not represent Robert Brown?"

Convenient Hooter

"Matilda, won't you sing something for the guests?"
"Oh, but, dear, it is so late; and besides they are beginning to go."
"Yes, but not quickly enough."

Unprepared for Disaster

She—"The doctor says your illness is all due to drink and that you must not take a drop more."
He—"Yes, I didn't know. It was such a serious illness. I thought it would just mean an operation."

Canadian Mileage in Billions
Over nine billion miles were travelled in 1930 by Canadian motor vehicles in Canada and visiting motor tourists from the United States on the highways of Canada, or a mileage that would circle the earth 350,000 times. To travel this tremendous mileage approximately half a billion gallons of gasoline were used, and the governments of the entire provinces in Canada received $43, 000,000 in revenue in the form of gasoline tax.

"These figures" states an official report, "indicate to what extent the automobile industry and the petroleum industries have become important factors in the economical life of Canada." In addition to the quantity of gasoline used by automobiles and other motor vehicles in Canada, in 1930, over 131, 000,000 gallons were used for other purposes. According to the latest compilation Canadian refineries produced 71 per cent of the total quantity of gasoline used in the Dominion. These refineries capitalised at $1,573,132, used over a billion gallons of imported crude oil, mainly from the U. S. and from the Republics of Colombia and Peru, and over 37, 000, 000 gallons of Canadian crude oil. Automobile registry in Canada last year numbered 1,233,888 vehicles of which 1, 047, 491 were passenger cars, so that there was one vehicle to every eight persons in the Dominion.

Motor tourist travel to New Brunswick from United States was almost 50 per cent greater in 1930 than in the previous year, according to a statistical statement issued recently by the Canadian Customs Commissioner.

While the railroads of this continent are not responsible for deaths or injuries to trespassers on their properties, they annually spend many thousands of dollars in preventative steps and educational campaigns to reduce this drain on the men and women of the country.

The Pictures

That gay lusty madcap of a Mexican girl, Lupe Velez, came to town again today at the Orpheum theatre, and will play to-night, Friday, and Saturday, July 26, 27 and August 1. Lupe is appearing with Jean Harlow and John Holland in "Hell Harbor," the United-Artists-Inspiration conception of what it is like for a young girl to match her wit with a mercenary father and an avivicious trader.

The story brings one back to those glamorous days when pictures really had cutlasses and black-eyes. It winds its way thrillingly through a series of murders and scrimagames and concludes as all stories must conclude—with the victory of Jupe fast in the arms of her man and the moon shining down upon them. But there is no really substance to the tale. It recounts the hardness of a father to his daughter and of his attempt to marry her to his own monetary advantage; and of her refusal to bow to his selfish will.

Acted to the hilt by the cast which includes, besides Miss Velez, Jean Harlow and John Holland, also Gibson Gowland, Harry Allen, Al St. John, Paul Burns and George Hook-Asta. "Hell Harbor" also has the distinction of having been made completely outside studio walls. Most of the scenes having been shot in a romantic setting outside Tampa Fla. Pictures of scenes aboard a merchantman at night have been etched with artistic understanding.

Next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday the management of the local theatre will show, "Just Imagine," a tale of love and laughter in 1980. A star cast consisting of that old favorite El Brendel, assisted by Maureen O'Sullivan, John Garrick, Marjorie White and Frank Albertson. This fine picture showing the world of 1980, was directed by David Butler.

Do not forget the fight picture coming soon.
